temperatures around the British Isles and the Nordic countries continued to be high, although slightly cooler than in previous weeks when an extreme marine heatwave had threatened marine life. The Antarctic region also experienced very high temperatures, with many stations registering positive temperatures despite the winter season. The Vernadsky station broke its July temperature record, with 8.7°C. Friederike Otto, Senior Lec-will likely break this record again in the coming months. We absolutely need to stop burning fossil fuels. Saleemul Haq, Director, International Centre for Climate Change and Development (ICCCAD), Independent University, Bangladesh. "Loss and damage from human-induced climate change has arrived throughout the world with the hottest day ever. Expect many hottest days in future."
